

Quick Facts

- The CRASH! materials are for high schools, junior high schools, and middle schools
- No additional time is required to use the CRASH! resources – they are integrated as real-world examples into existing lessons to make the topics more interesting to students
- CRASH! is not a program, like D.A.R.E. – it does not require a specific amount of time
- CRASH! aligns with state learning guidelines, and supports state-mandated testing
- Students are motivated by working on actual motor vehicle homicide police reports
- A subtle, effective safe driving message is delivered without preaching about safety
- States using CRASH! have seen a significant reduction in teen traffic fatalities – after the first year using CRASH! in NH and RI teen driving fatalities went down by 25%
- The CRASH! materials can be used again and again, year after year
- An SRO is a natural way of connecting teachers to the CRASH! resource
- CRASH! is the perfect “leave behind” when someone makes a presentation at a school, because it extends the message long after the presentation
- A police officer or deputy does not teach the CRASH! activity – the CRASH! materials are for the classroom teacher (an officer may be available as a real-world resource)
- One CRASH! Toolbox services every physics, science, math, biology, health, and driver’s ed teacher; duplicate materials can be printed from the Resources CD.
- Because of copyrights, the CRASH! Toolbox should not be shared with another school
- CRASH! is used to teach the same topics that are already being taught
